The Health Benefits of Smiling

1. Smiling is contagious
Because of complex brain activity that occurs when you see someone smiling, smiles are contagious. Just seeing one person smiling activates the area of your brain that controls your facial movement, which leads to a grin. Even in bad situations, if you smile, others are likely to mimic the expression.
2. Smiling lowers stress and anxiety
It's not easy to keep smiling in stressful situations, but studies report that doing exactly that has health benefits. When recovering from a stressful situation, study participants who were smiling had lower heart rates than those with a neutral facial expression. The next time you're feeling stressed, just try smiling to calm yourself down.
3. Smiling releases endorphins
Smiling can help you manage stress and anxiety by releasing endorphins, chemicals that makes you happier. Endorphins are the same chemicals you get from working out or running, resulting in what is known as a runner's high. Smile more to get that high without running.

Smiling is an easy way to boost your mood, be healthier, feel better, and be viewed as more trustworthy and a better leader. Whenever you're in a stressful situation or are feeling down, slap a grin on your face so you can take advantage of the many benefits smiling has to offer.
